授業題目	International Education and Development: An Introduction
授業の目的と概要	This course covers a wide range of knowledge and discussion about international education and development. It aims at enhancing students' understanding of basic knowledge and up-to-date discussion on international education and development towards 2030 and beyond. It will begin with mapping paradigm shifts of international education and development before and after WWII, after which theories of development and the role of education in these theories will be reviewed. Then, it will introduce key themes of international education and development and raise discussion on these issues both in developed countries and developing countries. In the final stage of the course, the history of international cooperation in education and development and newly emerging models for education and sustainable development will be introduced and discussed. Students will engage in discussion about assigned readings and share their opinions and reflections that link to selected themes on international education and development in class. Then, featured guest speakers from international organizations and new emerging donor countries will share experiences and discuss the achievements and challenges of international cooperation in educational development. Finally, students are invited to select themes related to international education and development for written assignments and presentations.
